La Grande Dame of Champagne

Widow Clicquot or Veuve Clicquot becomes one of the first businesswomen of modern times. She was only 27 when she took over the business of her late husband who established the Champagne house in 1772.

In an era when women were excluded from the business world, she dared to assume the head of the company. Madame Clicquot's character might be summarized with two words: audacious and intelligent.

She would seize each new opportunity that arose, willing to take risks, and as such she was able to expand her business to all four corners of the world. Uncompromising when it came to the quality of her wines, she perfected new techniques of production. She invented the riddling table to clarify Champagne and innovated the very first blend of rosé Champagne.
